Profile:

A landscape should have a spatial quality in which variety is key to spatial experiences. To me, quality means that function and aesthetics go hand in hand and a balance is found between logic and adventure. Details are most important, because that is what responds to our senses. Size, shape, texture, colour, sound and smell all influence how we feel and how we experience our surroundings. The well-being of both other species and us improves when we share our habitat together. I strive for nature inclusive environments in which ecology supports the needs of modern citizens.
